ADMIRAL'S CALL BOX

SUPERINTENDENT ADDRESSES SEXUAL HARASSMENT/DISCRIMINATION AT NPS

Recently I received a letter in a Campus Call Box which made general complaints about sexual discrimination and sexual harassment occurring in NPS classrooms and office spaces. The letter indicated that the author personally had observed repeated instances of sexual discrimination and sexual harassment.

All Naval personnel have the right and the responsibility to report noted sexual harassment using informal or formal grievance procedures. Such reports can be made without fear of intimidation, reprisal or harassment.

If the complainant feels insufficient or untimely action has been taken by the chain of command, that person should call 646-2511 to schedule a request mast with me.

The author of the letter did not provide specifics to allow the command the opportunity to take appropriate action and the letter unfortunately was anonymous.

I ask the author, or anyone else, noting sexual harassment to confront the person perceived as harassing an individual and make further reports as required.

REFLECTIONS OF A NUGGET NAVAL ASTRONAUT

(Ed. Note. This is the final part in a continuing article, by astronaut Lt. Cmdr. Daniel W. Bursch, a graduate of NPS, on the space program from Project Gemini to the space shuttle program.)

by Lt. Cmdr. Daniel W. Bursch

As a Navy Lieutenant Commander in the Astronaut Corps who is now aware of the tremendous contributions made by USN/USMC astronauts, I feel I have quite a tradition to uphold. I must also note that the contributions of Naval astronauts in manned space flight is a mere fraction of the total Naval involvement in our country's space program. That involvement includes, for example, the Naval men and women who manned the many tracking, communications and recovery forces around the globe for projects Mercury through the Space Shuttle; Naval engineers who contributed to the design of U.S. spacesuits; a former Navy submariner (Dr. Maxime Faget) who designed the Mercury spacecraft; and far too many other USN/USMC men and women capable of even being recognized within the scope of this one article.

Future missions in space will be getting longer, and quite frankly, more like a Naval deployment. For example, six month "deployments" are anticipated aboard Space Station Freedom which will become our country's primary life-science and materials-science research tool in earth orbit. As Space Station Freedom enables our country to better understand the body's reaction to longer periods of space flight, I am confident that just as the Navy blazed an airborne trail across the Atlantic in an NC-4, the Naval tradition of exploration will forge a path back to the moon and then on to two-year round trip missions to Mars.

Someday, I am sure, another nugget Naval Astronaut will research USN/USMC involvement in our nation's Space Program at the same time that he or she is overwhelmed with new friends, a new job, new acronyms, and a new organizational chart. But, for that next naval nugget, I hope the research into USN/USMC contributions to our Space Program occurs in a new spacecraft and on a new journey to another planet.

SAFETY

BY MICHELLE JAY

HINTS TO AVOID PAIN/LOSS OF WORKTIME REPETITIVE MOTION INJURIES

CTS (carpal tunnel syndrome) has been observed in several occupations throughout the country. CTS is characterized as a median nerve inside the carpal tunnel of the wrist. This compression is usually caused by repetitive motion/vibration of the fingers, hands, and wrist (i.e., typing, using power drills etc.) and can cause pain, numbness, tingling and loss of feeling in the hand.

Take a look at your workplace. Are you performing duties that expose you to repetitive motion? The following tips are suggested by the American Therapy Association to help prevent repetitive motion injuries:

- When using power tools wear vibration reduction gloves.
- Keep your wrists relaxed and straight, use only finger movements to strike keys.
- Press keys with the least pressure necessary.

-Move your entire hand to press hard to reach keys. Do not overextend your fingers.

-Use two hands if necessary for combination keystrokes, such as shifting to upper case.

-Periodically switch to other activities to give your wrists a break.

If you would like more information on prevention of CRT and other repetitive motion injuries, stop by the safety office in Herrmann Hall-040.
